

Sirs: Please do not preempt current state laws regarding "no-call" or telephone privacy call lists. States should have the ability to institute more stringent rules than the federal government, depending on the wishes of the people of that state. Indiana's current Telephone Privacy Act has cut the number of unwanted phone calls to my home by over 98%. Anything less is clearly unacceptable to myself and my family. Telephone solicitors are chomping at the bit to disrupt the peace and quiet of my home. Please do not usurp the authority the citizens of the state of Indiana have placed in their public officials. We need to do the job at the state level.
